CAREER COMPASS in short...

“Career Compass” aims to support young adults in our communities to develop their career management and resilience skills for the post-pandemic society, and labour market. Specifically, it aims to improve the provision of lifelong guidance in our regions, and to enhance its integration into lifelong learning structures, by developing a suite of 40 micro-learning resources linked to the Scottish Career Management Skills Framework, and supporting the development of local synergies between education sectors.

Career Compass will develop a comprehensive delivery model for a new career planning intervention to support young adults who have left formal education, suffered pandemic-induced job losses or are currently in vulnerable employments. It will adopt an ab initio approach to developing these new resources at introductory and advanced levels. With goals for guidance service provision increasingly framed within overall lifelong learning policies of Member States, the model developed by Career Compass will be relevant and applicable beyond the initial target group and throughout the education and training landscape where guidance services are provided. The creation of synergies between education professionals and stakeholders across different sectors of education and training, including with VET, schools, and employment support services is a target, which all Career Compass partners aim to work towards.
